The Changing Nonprofit Management Landscape

- For much of the sector's history, nonprofits were viewed differently from their for-profit counterparts:
 - Less hierarchical
 - Higher job security
 - Informal management
 - Lower pay, less benefits, longer hours
 - Altruistically managed
 - High emphasis on employee satisfaction
- These differences are beginning to dissipate as the for-profit and nonprofit sectors continue to shift and merge
- Both organizational types face similar challenges in establishing personnel policy and keeping a happy staff

Questions to Consider Prior to Hiring

- What are the tasks and duties the new employee will perform?
- Are the tasks necessary?
- Could someone within the organization perform these tasks?
- Can we have these services performed without hiring an employee?
- What is the time frame for hiring?
- How will the employee's tasks change over time?
- What level of support do we need for this role?

Types of Staff to Consider

- Hired staff:
 - Advantages: More loyal, more buy-in, more flexible
 - Disadvantages: Require constant pay (expensive)
- Paid contractors:
 - Advantages: No tax withholding, easy to hire and fire, no benefits
 - Disadvantages: Only legal under specific circumstances
- Volunteers:
 - Advantages: They're free
 - Disadvantages: They're free
- Temps:
 - Advantages: Allow an organization to respond to temporary or seasonal fluctuations in demand
 - Disadvantages: Recruiting and training may not be worth the effort
- Outsourcing:
 - Advantages: Avoid expenses and administrative burden of hiring employees
 - Disadvantages: Often more expensive than temps

The Hiring Process

- 1 Prepare the job description
- 2 Prepare the job notice for hiring sites
- 3 Advertise the job
- 4 Review applications
- 5 Interview candidates
- 6 Select the candidate
- 7 Revivify resume and references
- 8 Negotiate the terms of an offer
- 9 Make the formal offer

Initial Policies to Consider

- Should the organization hire employees?
- What should be included in staff job descriptions?
- How much should staff members be compensated?
- Should various staff members be salaried or hourly?
- Should an office be established? If so, where and what hours should be the operation?

Organizational Policies to Continually Consider

- Hiring policies – how job vacancies should be advertised, search parameters, etc
- Firing policies – what conditions permit dismissal without appeal, severance pay, placement service provisions, etc
- Probationary periods of employment
- Sick leave and vacation
- Holidays
- Personal days
- Overtime policies
- Compensatory time
- Full-time vs part-time delineation
- Sabbatical leave

Organizational Policies to Continually Consider Cont.

Discipline Continuum

- Poor employee performance usually results from a variety of factors
- Firing is usually a last resort, poor performance or rule breaking usually falls into a spectrum of discipline including:
 - ① Verbal communication
 - ② Written warning
 - ③ Written formal warning
 - ④ Suspension without pay
 - ⑤ Firing
- It is appropriate to skip these steps and go straight to firing when the misconduct threatens the organization

How to Fire

- 1 Ensure the fired employee is first to know
- 2 Fire in private
- 3 Explain in detail why they are being fired, and point out previous attempts to reach accommodation
- 4 Explain applicable company policies, procedures, and benefits
- 5 Arrange an exit interview if appropriate

Volunteers in the Nonprofit Sector

- Few nonprofits are fully staffed with paid employees
- Volunteers in the nonprofit sector are so common that the “voluntary sector” is sometimes used in place of the nonprofit sector
- Volunteers are beginning to skew older (matching changes in the population), so this needs to be kept in mind when designing volunteer roles

Benefits of Having Volunteers

- ① They do not require salaries or fringe benefits
- ② Often are highly motivated
- ③ Can speak up without fear of payment repercussions
- ④ Bring skills to the organization it cannot afford
- ⑤ Bring in a network of community contacts

Considerations to Having Volunteers

- ① Volunteers do still need supplies to work
- ② Retention is difficult
- ③ Can quickly leave their work if it is repetitive and boring
- ④ Available for fewer hours a day

Volunteer Job Description

- Examples of duties to be performed
- Specific skills or training required
- Location where duties will be performed
- Hours per week required
- Time period
- Supervision or assistance provided
- Training Provided
